FCC Mail Room

Dear FCC,

I'm a Californian resident that fully supports net neutrality and the Title II rules that are in place right now, today. Having a even playing field is essential to the structure of the internet, because the power of gate keeper is out of the hands of the ISP. Therefore, I agree with the 40 ISP that sent you a letter also; saying they all support net neutrality as it stands today and otherwise would hurt their bottom line. These are small businesses that rely on fair competition on the digital marketplace.

Removing Title II designation would significantly hinder that support, giving power to a few monopolistic ISP that are also the owners of stores, newspapers, and lobbying firms. Having the current FCC head chair lead the fight for an "open and free internet" has awakened the masses, and they do not agree with Mr. Ajit Pai handing over control of everyone's access to the internet to a few megacorporations; one of which he used to work for, Verizon.

I don't agree with current litigation going through the FCC right now. I want to keep Title II and strengthen it's rules to support net neutrality. I want the head of the FCC, Ajit Pai, to step down from his position because of the apparent conflicts of interest with him and the industry of his current employer. I agree with the former FCC head Tom Wheeler's comments the last week of June; where he slammed the current FCC for handing over power to the likes of Comcast, Verizon, Time Warner, etc. Not only would removing Title II be bad for internet access, but it will also hurt business; particularly small business and their bottom line.

Please consider keeping Title II and support net neutrality, indefinitely.
